The CodeBusters (CSS)

For the updated version of our website “On the Grind”, we focused more on the appearance. Previously, our website barely had any color and was mainly white, which was not eye catching for the users. For this version we decided we wanted to really incorporate our product through its color by adding mainly brown which gives off more of the coffee vibe. We made sure that the colors are more user friendly on the eyes and the texts are visible. Most changes also occurred on the navigation bar and our checkout pages. Minor changes on the rest of our pages.

Similarly when we started working on our website, we had some issues with the pushing and pulling. Sometimes we notice that when we preview the pages, it shows up differently or it’s not the updated version. We would check the source code on Github to make sure that everything is pushed and up to date and would try pulling again. We also faced some issues with adding the hover feature for the “faq” page. We wanted users to be able to hover over the questions and the answer should appear. Although we were not able to achieve this goal for this version, we were able to create close to it. The question and answers are showing and when users hover over the question, the answer will be the only thing that’s visible. Another issue we had is how some things are displaying. It was a lot of trial and error and editing both our html and css code until it displayed the way we planned it to be.

Overall, our website is definitely a better and more updated version compared to the first one and we will continue to build on it and make it better.
